About the Museum

The Panama City Publishing Company building was constructed by George and Lillian West in 1920 in the heart of St. Andrews. The building served as home to Panama City's first newspaper, the Panama City Pilot, as well as the St. Andrews Bay News and Lynn Haven Free Press.

After George West's death in 1926, "Miss Lillian" continued to run the business. Charles "Buddy" West, George's great-great grandson continued the tradition until 2005, when he sold the building to the City of Panama City.

The building was renovated and opened to the public as a museum in 2008.

The building contains over 70 major items as well as photos, newspapers and documents produced by George and Lillian West.

The original presses and type collection are on display and regularly used by volunteers, including Buddy West, who print cards, posters and art.

Members of the Publishing Company Museum sustain programs that support efforts to preserve St. Andrews history, engage the community, and revitalise our economy in St. Andrews. The history, the Publishing Museum, the Print Shop, permanent and rotating museum exhibits, educational programs and workshops, and community events -- are made possible through memberships
